Free download from Softonic: device-based assessment (DBA) of patients is the single most effective measure to improve clinical outcomes, improve patient safety, and reduce medical errors. Despite being the single most effective measure to reduce errors, there are no reports of the use of DBA in academic medical centers. For DBA to be successful, it must integrate clinical care with patient safety and quality improvement activities. We propose to develop a DBA system that integrates the use of electronic health record and electronic medical record, pharmacy dispensing, and laboratory, radiology and laboratory result data (ePrescribe) with the objective of better managing transitions of care (the care delivery process that begins with hospital admission and ends with the transfer of care to a hospital or other setting). The proposed study will create the foundations for establishing a DBA system with the potential for improving care transitions at the University of Colorado Hospital (UCH) through the identification of high-risk patients and implementing targeted interventions to improve care transitions. The proposed project, - From Algorithm to Action: Improving Care Transitions Through Implementation of a
